Alice is working hard to change the way you shop online. You can now go to the website (www.alice.com) and sign up for email updates. You can also follow the founder's blog at (www.flywheelblog.com).

ALICE.COM RAISES $4.3 MILLION IN FIRST FINANCING

Alice.com, the latest start-up from serial entrepreneurs Brian Wiegand and Mark McGuire, recently announced it has secured $4.3 million in first round funding. The round was led jointly by private equity angel funds Kegonsa Capital Partners (www.kegonsapartners.com) and DaneVest Tech Fund (www.danevestcapital.com). On-Line Ventures also participated. Alice.com is developing a new online retail platform that better connects manufacturers and customers in the giant consumer packaged goods market. Complete details on Alice are not being disclosed until the company's public launch in the Spring of 2009. The company's offer will focus on non-food related household essentials with a business model that is inspired by two key themes: 1) consumers lack a convenient, cost effective way to buy household essentials online today; and, 2) consumer packaged goods companies need a fresh alternative to the big brand, bricks and mortar retailer model that is supported by traditional mass market advertising.

Alice is the fourth start-up from founders Brian Wiegand and Mark McGuire, who most recently sold Jellyfish.com to Microsoft Corporation in September, 2007, which became the basis for Microsoft's Live Search cashback program. The pair left their roles at Microsoft in June, 2008, to found Alice.com. Brian and Mark are also the founders of NameProtect which was sold to Computer Services Corporation in the spring of 2006. I highly recommend this article in Vanity Fair by Niall Ferguson (www.http://www.vanityfair.com/politics/features/2008/12/banks200812?currentPage=all). The author insightfully describes how Mathematical Models (“Planet Finance”) ignored history and human nature and deemed value had no meaning. Now the question is “What Next?” it appears we’re in for a long recession and the continuing deleveraging of the financial system. The IPO markets are near frozen as are the banks’ lending capabilities even for companies with sterling credit. Early stage companies raising capital today are having an extremely difficult time. Those companies with sufficient capital have a greater chance of a successful exit sometime in
